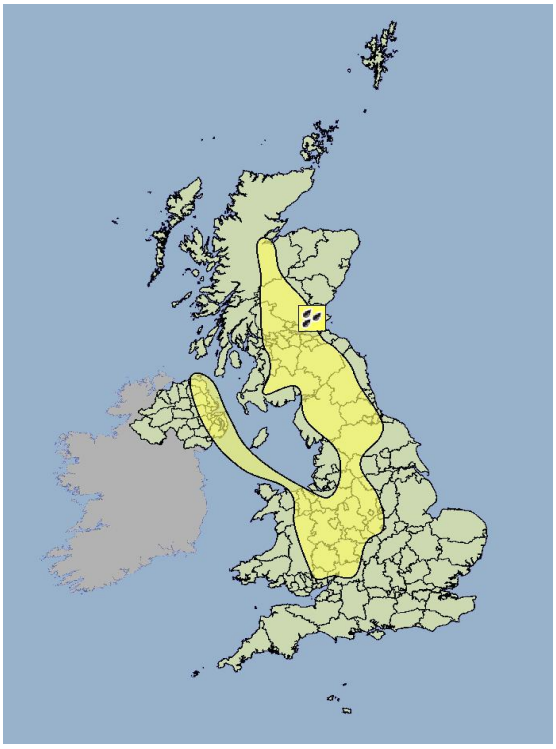
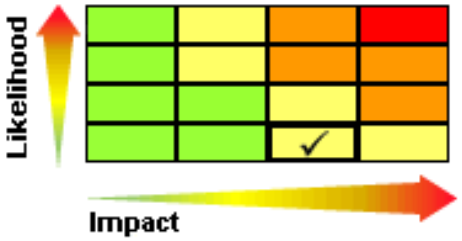
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Thunderstorms are most likely to break out over high ground this afternoon, but there is potential for these to drift into low lying, urban areas. The torrential downpours will be slow moving and there could be more than 20 mm in an hour locally, with more than 40 mm in a few hours possible. Additionally, the thunderstorms will be accompanied by hail and frequent lightning strikes.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 13:00 on Tue, 07th Jun 2016 until 21:00 on Tue, 07th Jun 2016

Many places will remain dry this afternoon, but there is potential for some heavy showers and thunderstorms to break out. Be aware of the possibility of surface water flooding and disruption to travel where torrential downpours do occur.

This warning has been updated to bring forward the start time and to adjust the areas affected.
